

MAYOR QUILTS HIS TOWN.

Dunellen So Intemperate Sanford Will Go to Westfield.

Special to The New York Times.

DUNELLEN, N. J., Sept. 25.—Mayor William A. Sanford has bought property in Westfield, a neighboring town, and will remove there before his term as the town's chief executive expires on Dec. 31. The intemperance of Dunellen is the reason Mayor Sanford gives for quitting.

"Why are you going to leave town?" a reporter asked the Mayor to-day.

"It's just this," he replied. "I cannot go down Main Avenue to the Post Office unless a half dozen or so persons stop me and say, 'Mayor, come let's have a drink.' If I go to the barber's shop, it's the same way. I'm tired of it. There are too many rummies and booze fighters in the town for me, that's why I am going to Westfield. I'm sure the people down there won't bother the life out of me asking me to come in and take a drink."

And the Mayor is no teetotaler, either.
